WHAT DO YOU SEE 📷 ?

There are also many cultural intersections between CMU and other organizations in the surrounding area. This is what inspired us, Korawich Kavee and Tiffany Chang, to start this project as part of the 2025-2026 Libraries Student Advisory Council (LSAC)

Even if you don't watch TV, you've probably heard of the local Pittsburgh media outlet WQED. The bus stop here features a sturdy concrete bench, and the books in the little library box are always in circulation.

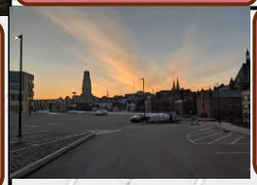
If you step off the bus at 5th Ave and Morewood, you might notice an MGB mouse engraved in the concrete sidewalk. Why is it there, and what does MGB mean? Still no clue.

The Mudge House koi pond (koi not pictured, but spiritually present). Relaxing even without AC.

Pittsburgh can get pretty snowy. Though it can be a bit tricky to walk on snow, most of the time it's still manageable thanks to the staff from CMU Facilities Management Services (FMS).

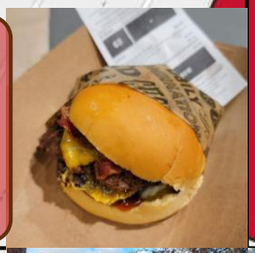
The kids that play here seems to have fun with not just the playground equipment but also gardening and harvesting.

I sometimes notice a good view from ordinary walking trip to home passing through this space. Cathy with sun set in the back? no way I am passing by without taking a shot.



The Tepper parking lot turns unexpectedly beautiful at sunset. The wide, open pavement frames a skyline of towers, spires, and warm evening light, creating a moment of calm between the business school and the city beyond. It's the kind of view you catch on your way to class or heading home that reminds people this is Pittsburgh.

Campus life powered by cheese, bacon, and questionable time management. Nothing hits quite like a Stack'd Underground affrodable burger



Students stream across Forbes Avenue between Tepper and the main campus, moving through one of CMU's busiest daily crossroads. The walkway fills with backpacks, conversations, and the rhythm of classes changing, framed by early-autumn trees and a mix of modern glass and historic brick.

Fall at CMU hits different. It has quiet paths, warm light on Morewood, and that perfect mix of crunching leaves and campus calm before the next exam drops.

All the buses that matter to people are here (PRT 61A, B, C, D, and 28X to PIT). There used to be a clinic (CMU UHS) here too, before the new Highmark building.
